LACCD's $3.5 Billion Bond Measure

Measure J, the Los Angeles Community College District's (LACCD) $3.5 billion community college bond measure, will help create the facilities that will be necessary to prepare workers for the new green jobs needed by the sustainable industries that will be key to revitalizing the economy of Southern California.

Measure J will do six important things:

1. Improve existing college buildings and infrastructure to meet modern standards
2. Provide state of the art technology for all classrooms, buildings, and campuses
3. Make the Colleges accessible to all by addressing all ADA barriers
4. Increase the availability of satellite facilities to better serve under-served parts of the District
5. Complete the District's "off the grid" renewable energy implementation effort
6. Provide new buildings to teach green technologies and green job skills

At the moment, the District has 30 sustainable buildings under construction and is spending about $20 million per week of the remaining funds available from Propositions A and AA. At this rate, the available funds will be spent in 2009. If Measure J is approved, more than 70 major projects and hundreds of smaller projects will be undertaken. Some of the larger projects will be done under the District's design/build capability.

Measure J will:

- Repair aging buildings and infrastructure
- Create access to state of the art technology
- Bring the Community Colleges to the Communities
- Demonstrate the capability of green technology to broadly meet energy and facility needs
